

Bullying and being treated differently after ABI

“A few kids in my year started to make funny comments about my scar. They started to call me names and I found that really hard to deal with. It got me really cross so I swore at them and told them what I really thought about them.

The teachers didn't know what to do at first because they could see why I got upset but couldn't let me get away with swearing at people either. They now understand that my ABI sometimes makes me lose my temper and that I find school difficult to deal with when I have a headache. That helps a lot.

I know some kids find me hard to be around and I know that is because they don't really understand what has happened to me. They shouldn't bully me though because that is wrong.

My teacher now checks that things are OK with me and the kids who made fun of my scar have all been dealt with by the headmaster. They keep away from me now too.”
